① Propósito ② Requisitos ③ Evaluación	① The aim of this subject is to develop the student's awareness and production of English sounds, rhythm and intonation. A complete description of English segmental and suprasegmental features, as well as a thorough account of the phonological processes involved in connected speech will allow the student not only to ascertain this theoretical framework, but also to acquire specific strategies that will help him/her to strengthen and improve two of the four basic language skills: listening and speaking. Practice will obviously be an important basis of the course.
	③ Students will be graded according to the quality and regularity of their course work and the results of written/oral exams dealing with the theoretical and practical contents studied in class. Appropriate use of the language in exercises, assignments and exams will be required. Serious deficiencies in that respect will not grant a pass.
